VIAGRA AND ERECTILE DYSFUNCTION

Viagra or sildenafil citrate is a common and widely used prescribed medicine to treat erectile dysfunction or ED, also called impotence on men.

VIAGRA OR SILDENAFIL CITRATE IS A COMMON AND WIDELY USED
PRESCRIBED MEDICINE TO TREAT
ERECTILE DYSFUNCTION OR ED, ALSO CALLED IMPOTENCE ON MEN.

ED is a health condition wherein a man experience difficulty in getting or sustaining an erection during sexual activity. This occurs when there is no enough blood that flows to the penis, thus resulting to erection failure.

For some men, ED commonly occurs only once in a while, especially when you are under stress or medication. However, when it happens in a regular basis, you must consult a doctor as it can be a symptom of a more serious condition.

Who experience ED?

ED affects approximately 30 million American men. This condition is more than just psychological. Some people say “it is just in your head when you can’t sustain it”. This is not true. Medical studies proved that ED is a physical condition common to men in their 50’s and above. In a study among in Massachusetts about Male Aging, 52% of the respondents agreed that they have had ED on some degree. The study was participated by 1,290 aged male respondents. Men in their 50’s and up are among the reasons why Viagra was created – to provide life after midlife crisis. However, Pfizer, Viagra manufacturer, revealed that the primary consumers of this medicine are not male senior citizens.

ED is also experienced by men who suffer from an injury or side effects of other drugs. It can also be experienced men who are under depression and emotional trauma. To sustain erection during a sexual activity, a person should be in the mood and stimulated to perform. However, if you are depressed and under heavy medication, it will be difficult for you to get into the hype of emotional drive to sustain blood flow in your penis.

Medical conditions that cause ED

Medical and health conditions are among the major causes of ED among men. When a man is under medication for a particular illness, it will be difficult for him to get and sustain an erection – probably due to emotional and physical factors. Among the illnesses that can cause ED are the following:

- depression and anxiety
- Diabetes. A study shows that 83% of diabetic men experience ED. A diabetic person has higher amount of sugar, or glucose, in the blood which can cause damage to nerves and blood vessels, thus causing erection failure.
- Heart diseases, high cholesterol, obesity. Clogged arteries can hinder blood flow to the penis, which may cause ED.
- High blood pressure. 65% of high blood men suffer from ED. Medicines for high blood can cause ED.
- Obesity can cause real harm to your health. For example, it's associated with medical conditions that can affect blood flow. And when blood flow is affected, it can cause ED.
- Prostate problems and spine injury

Viagra is one of the prescribed medicines to address ED. However, make sure that you disclose any of your medical conditions to your doctor before taking in a tablet of this medicine as it may cause further risk to your health.
